APPLICATION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI

LARRY DEAN GAYTON prays that the Writ of Certiorari issue to the Georgia Court of Appeals to review the decision of the Georgia Supreme Court dated and entered November 4, 1987, (Case No. 45135) denying petitioner's motion for rehearing of the Georgia Sqpreme Court's previous decision on October 28, 1987, wherein that court denied petitioner's Application for Certiorari to review the decision of the Georgia Court of Appeals (Case No. 74688) dated September 17, 1987. The Georgia Court of Appeals affirmed his conviction for Driving While Under the Influence of Alcohol in violation of Official Code of Georgia Annotated §40-6-391 and sustained the trial court's denial of his Motion to Dismiss the prosecution. Petitioner's Motion for Stay of the Remittitur pending possible review of his case by this court was denied by the Georgia Court of Appeals on November 30, 1987. Because the record remains in the Georgia Court of Appeals it is prayed that the Writ be directed to that Court.

OPINIONS BELOW

Reproduced in the appendix to this petition are: (1) the Consent Order dated November 13, 1986, signed by The Honorable Tom E. Lewis, Judge, State Court of Spalding County, (2) Attorney General Bowers' letter dated August 1, 1986, to Governor Harris admitted at trial as defense exhibit "B", (3) the opinion of the Court of Appeals of Georgia dated September 17, 1987, affirming petitioner's conviction, (4) the decision of the Georgia Court of Appeals denying the petitioner's Motion for Rehearing dated September 30, 1987, (5) the decision of the Georgia Supreme Court dated October 28, 1987, denying petitioner's Application for Writ of Certiorari, (6) the order of the Georgia Supreme Court dated November 4, 1987, denying petitioner's Motion for Rehearing, and (7) the order of the Georgia Court of Appeals denying Petitioner's Motion for Stay of the Remittitur.

JURISDICTION

The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. §1257(3) which authorizes the grant of the Writ of Certiorari to the highest court of a State in a case where a right, privilege or immunity is specially claimed under the Constitution of the United States. The Georgia Supreme Court denied petitioner's timely motion for rehearing on November 4, 1987. In accordance with rule 20(1) of this Court, this Application for Certiorari is filed within sixty (60) days of the entry of the Judgment of the Georgia Supreme Court.

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISION INVOLVED

Constitution of the United States, Fourteenth Amendment, Section 1:

> All persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

LARRY DEAN GAYTON was convicted upon his plea of guilty of the offense of Driving While Under the Influence of Alcohol in violation of O.C.G.A. §40-6-391 on November 18, 1986, in the State Court of Spalding County, Georgia. Prior to conviction he had moved to dismiss the prosecution contending that he had been selectively prosecuted in violation of his 14th Amendment constitutional right to equal protection of the laws. The motion was denied.

Petitioner's challenge centered upon the findings of the highly publicized Georgia Bureau of Investigation (GBI) investigation of the Georgia State Patrol (GSP) which exposed the widespread "ticket fixing" practices of that agency continuing contemporaneously with the time of the petitioner's arrest by a GSP Trooper. The trial court had before it: (1) the GBI report on the ticket fixing investigation, known as GBI case number 30-0065-86; (2) a letter from Georgia Attorney General Michael Bowers to Governor Joe Frank Harris dated August 1, 1986; and (3) a draft copy of an unsigned, undated resolution of the State of Georgia Board of Public Safety. In consideration of petitioner's release of certain witnesses, including the Governor and the Attorney General, the State, with the concurrence of the trial court, entered into a consent order which provided that these documents would, "be considered in like manner as if it had been testified to in open court on direct and cross examination", including the "conclusion[s], statements, or other information contained therein". The consent order further provided that if petitioner's motion to dismiss alleging selective prosecution was denied upon a consideration of this evidence, the petitioner could stipulate to the facts indicating his guilt and plead guilty, but retain the right to appeal the issues presented in that overulled motion.

The Bowers letter and GBI report established the existence of a corrupt statewide system of selective traffic law enforcement of shocking proportions. They proved:

1. The "fixing" of traffic tickets within the GSP is widespread.

2. Ticket fixing is often done in response to pressure from high GSP officials.

3. Ticket fixing as a "prevalent" practice in the GSP, had not been halted but was indeed a "severe, historic, and present problem."

4. In return for certain favors (free lodging, meals and liquor) to key GSP supervisory personnel employees of Callaway Gardens and their families were granted "general immunity" from prosecution for traffic offenses.

5. The GBI investigation wasdiscontinued before the full extent of the practice could be ascertained because it was thought only "more of the same" would be discovered and because much of the records of the ticket fixing incidents had been destroyed by the GSP in contravention of specific instructions by the Attorney General.

6. Only 26% of the documents subpoenaed by the GBI from the GSP were produced as the GSP had destroyed some 74%.

7. Well over 90% of the sworn GSP

employees intereviewed in the GBI investigation had voided traffic citations for reasons other than clerical errors, had changed or reduced charges on citations for reasons other than mistakes of law or had recommended the dismissal of traffic cases for reasons other than evidentiary problems. Most had committed these practices on multiple occasions.

9. Overall some 36.0 percent (and as high as 44.4 percent in one troop) of the troopers interviewed advised the GBI that they had knowledge of or involvement in fixing tickets in exchange for gratuities or under pressure from superiors in the GSP.

10. Other reasons for fixing tickets included "requests from other troopers, other state or local law enforcement officers, superiors in the GSP, political figures, public officials and friends."

In short, the GBI report and Bowers' letter showed a widespread and insidious pattern of official corruption and discrimination.

The state made no showing that the practice of "fixing" traffic tickets because of constitutionally impermissible reasons such as payoffs and political and social influence had been halted at the time of petitioner's arrest and prosecution.

The trial court issued no written opinion in its denial of petitioner's Motion to Dismiss the prosecution but merely entered a judgment of conviction. On appeal the Georgia Court of Appeals, while acknowledging the petitioner had proven the existence of a practice which, "surreptitiously probably continues", found no denial of equal protection. The opinion, authored by Judge Birdsong, focused on the failure of petitioner's evidence to specifically quantify the number of tickets which had been fixed or prove the presence of a "vindictive" motive towards the petitioner in his prosecution:

> It is undisputed that an unknown number of citizens of Georgia had driving tickets, including moving traffic violations as well as DUI charges, "fixed." The evidence reflects that the investigation uncovered numerous tickets being fixed as the request of wealthy citizens, politically prominent personages, sports figures, and persons conferring privileges or personal goods in exchange for the fixing of tickets. The practice appears to have been the result of personal favors being exercised by members of the State patrol or at the direction of higher authority in the State Patrol. The number of such fixed tickets is apparently not discoverable inasmuch as records are not available or do not reflect the transmutations from a more serious offense to a less serious or dismissed disposition. It is clear however that within the overall number of traffic offenders, including DUI offenses, within this state, the number of tickets "fixed" is small, and, human vice being what it is, surreptitiously probably continues.

Within this context, we are required to evaluate the claim of selective prosecution. It is clear that within the contemplation of the law applicable to the theory of selective prosecution, that to succeed on a claim of selective prosecution, Gayton has the burden of showing: (1) that other similarly situated uniformly have not been prosecuted, and (2) that the allegedly discriminatory prosecution of himself was based upon an impermissible motive. SABEL v. STATE, 250 Ga. 640, 643 (4) (300 S.E.2d 663). Related within this same context, we can find no indication of a vindictive prosecution for there is no evidence that the State sought to prosecute Gayton or to increase the punishment for the offense of DUI in response to his exercise of any of his constitutional rights. See UNITED STATES v. BURT, 619 F2d 831 (9th Cir. 1980).

The fact that some persons are wrongly singled out for special favor does not justify a charge of discrimination or selective prosecution by those who are not.

GAYTON v. STATE, ___ Ga. App. ___, at _____.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

Over one hundred years ago this court recognized that even a measure fair on its face, if administered in a partial and unduly discriminatory manner, could violate the equal protection guarantees of the 14th Amendment. In that decision, YICK WO v. HOPKINS, 118 U.S. 356 (1886), Justice Matthews writing the opinion of the court noted:

> Though the law itself be fair on its face and impartial in appearance, yet, if it is applied and administered by public authority with an evil eye and an unequal hand, so as practically to make unjust and illegal discriminations between persons in similar circumstances, material to their rights, the denial of equal justice is still within the prohibition of the Constitution.

YICK WO, supra, 118 U.S. 373-374.

In a more recent pronouncement this court in OYLER v. BOLES, 368 U.S. 448 (1962), had occasion to address the application of the discriminatory enforcement doctrine of YICK WO, supra, in the context of the West Virginia habitual ciminal statute. There, the defendant simply asserted that others similarly situated were not prosecuted as he had been. In rejecting the defendant's contention that his allegations demonstrated a denial of equal protection the court stated:

> [T]he conscious exercise of some selectivity in enforcement is not in itself a federal constitutional violation. Even though the statistics in this case might imply a policy of selective enforcement, it was not stated that the selection was deliberately based upon an unjustifiable classification such as race, religion, or arbitrary classification. Therefore grounds > supporting a finding of a denial of equal protection were not alleged.

> OYER, supra, 368 U.S. at 456.

In WAYTE v. UNITED STATES, 470 U.S. _ __, 84 L.Ed 2d 547 (1985), the court further defined the applicable standard:

> As we have noted in a slightly different context, however, although prosecutorial discretion is broad, it is not "'unfettered.' Selectivity in the enforcement of criminal laws is . . .subject to constitutional constraints". [cits ommitted]. In particular, the decision to prosecute may not be "'deliberately based upon an unjustifiable standard such as race, religion, or other arbitrary classification,'" [cits ommitted], including the exercise of protected statutory and constitutional rights...

In the matter sub judice the petitioner's evidence unequivocally established the State of Georgia by and through the GSP utilized an enforcement scheme which arbitrarilly recognized two classes of motorists: (1) the "immune" class which consisted of substantial numbers of motorists with political, social and financial clout willing to exchange "favors" such as free lodging, food and liquor for that immunity; and (2) the "non-immune" class which consisted of all other motorists. It is undisputed that this was a "deliberate" policy approved at the very highest levels of the GSP. By the admission of the Attorney General of Georgia but for petitioner's arbitrary classification as a member of the "non-immune" class this petitioner would certainly not have been prosecuted as the first class had de facto "general immunity" from prosecution.

While the Georgia courts have concluded, "[t]he fact that some persons are wrongly singled out for special favor does not justify a charge of discrimination or selective prosecution by those who are not", the highest courts of some other states would probably find proof of this nature sufficient to constitute a prima facie case of selective prosecution.

In MURGUIA v. MUNICIPAL COURT OF BAKERSFIELD, 124 Cal. 204, 540 P2d 44 (1975), the defendant contended his prosecution for certain traffic offenses was motivated by his membership in the United Farm Workers Union. The trial court denied the defendant's motion to require the State to produce certain documentary evidence needed to support his claim of selective prosecution ruling that the defense of selective prosecution was not available in a criminal case. In remanding the Supreme Court of California noted:

> . . . [T]he OYLER decision clearly indicates that if a defendant does establish that the prosecuting > authorities, in administering a statute, have followed an enforcement policy, "deliberately based upon an unjustifiable standard such as race, religion, or other arbitrary classification," a denial of equal protection will have been demonstrated. . .

MURGUIA, supra, 540 P2d at 53.

In WISCONSIN v. JOHNSON, 246 N.W.2d 503 (1976), the defendants, two females accused of prostitution, contended the prosecution was violative of equal protection because the complainant, their "customer", was not also charged although the alleged criminal acts had been completed and the defendants paid $100.00 each. The trial court had granted the defendants' motion to dismiss apparently purely on the facts of that particular case. The Wisconsin Supreme Court remanded the case for a hearing to determine whether the prosecutor had a valid reason for not charging the patron:

> There may be valid prosecutorial reasons for prosecuting a prostitute and not the patron under given circumstances such as organized commercial prostitution, immunity from prosecution to testify, and others. Nor can one or few isolated incidents of failure to prosecute both be sufficient grounds to escape prosecution for a criminal act upon which equal protection grounds. To avoid prosecution for a criminal offense upon equal protection grounds it must be shown that the failure to prosecute was selective, persistent, discriminatory and without justifiable prosecutorial discretion. (EMPHASIS ADDED)

JOHNSON, supra, 246 N.W.2d at 507.

Unlike the JOHNSON and MURGUIA courts, central to the Georgia courts' analysis was the defendant's ability to demonstrate that the class in which he was arbitrarilly placed in the state's enforcement scheme was in the minority. Aside from the fact that the petitioner's ability to accomplish this feat was hampered by the GSP destruction of the documentary evidence which would have proved the true extent of the ticket fixing involved, this simply is not the test enunciated in the decisions of this court. Having shown that the discriminatory practice complained of was "widespread" and intentionally implemented the petitioner has made out a prima facie of denial of equal protection and, thus, the burden shifted to the state to show the practice was an exercise of valid proscecutorial descretion. JOHNSON, supra, 246 N.W.2d at 507.

CONCLUSION

This application for certiorari merits acceptance not only because of the misapplication of the law by the Georgia courts but also the implied rationale for their decision. It must be clearly and unmistakably stated that the underlying guilt for the offense charged is totally irrelevant in a discriminatory prosecution case. The focus of the present application is not upon whether the petitioner is guilty or innocent of the Drunk Driving violation but, rather, upon the constitutional defect in the initiation of prosecution and the enforcement of the statute.

Importantly, the Georgia Supreme Court's failure to grant review of the Georgia Court of Appeal's decision in this case leaves standing a decision in apparent total disharmony with the decisions of other state's courts of last resort. Those cases have focused upon whether the laws in question were in fact enforced in a selective fashion intentionally without a valid justification for that discrimination. Having shown the existence of a selective, intentional discriminatory scheme of enforcement with clearly no valid reason for that discrimination he would certainly have made out a prima facie defense of selective prosecution under the rulings of those other states.

The instant application for certiorari presents an issue which, if left unresolved, poses a grave threat to the integrity of the law enforcement process of this State. The rule of law under which a civilized society operates requires the enforcement mechanism be viewed by the public as impartial, objective, and unbiased. The legal theory of selective prosecution serves as a critical safeguard against improper prosecutorial discretion and it is crucial that this theory not be so diluted that it is rendered ineffective and meaningless. The instant case threatens such a result. It presents an appropriate opportunity for this court to analyze and define the nature and breadth of this defense and to redeem its vitality upon which the Georgia courts have dangerously impinged.

Re: Ticket Fixing in the Georgia State Patrol

Dear Governor Harris:

The Law Department staff and I have carefully reviewed the enclosed report of the Georgia Bureau of Investigation (GBI) concerning its investigation of allegations of ticket fixing in the Georgia State Patrol (GSP). In this letter I will provide you with our legal analysis of the GBI's findings.

While the GBI report speaks for itself, I believe that it is clear from the report that there is widespread ticket fixing in the GSP and that ticket fixing is often done in response to pressure from high GSP officials and others. Moreover, there is a strong inference that there is ticket fixing in return for favors. These factual conclusions have important legal ramifications.

Although ticket fixing in many of the forms found by the GBI to exist is a felony under O.C.G.A. Section 45-11-11, I do not believe that criminal prosecutions are appropriate. First, there is simply too much of it to deal with appropriately through criminal prosecutions. Second, many of the individuals who would be witnesses in criminal prosecution have possibly been compromised because of conflicting statements made in the GSP internal investigation. Third, no single incident of ticket fixing, though it might technically be a crime, would in my judgment warrant prosecuton. Fourth, a great deal of potentially relevant evidence has been destroyed. It is worthy of note that the recent destruction of records by the GSP highlighted on Page 31 of the GBI report is directly contrary to express, written advice given to the GSP by this office on April 23, 1986.

One aspect of the GBI's findings concerning ticket does, however, merit special attention. There is a strong, if not inescapable, inference from the GBI's findings that favors from Callaway Gardens for certain GSP supervisory personnel, to include Colonel Hugh Hardison, have been given in return for a general immunity by the GSP for Callaway Gardens personnel and their family members from prosecution for traffic offense. This situation could very well involve violations of the federal Hobbs Act, which in general makes the receiving of favors because of one's official position a felony. This matter should be referred to the United States Attorney for the Middle District of Georgia for his consideration.

On the basis of the GBI report, I strongly recommend that immediate administrative action be taken to halt the ticket fixing practices prevalent in the GSP. Because these practices often violate the felony provisions of O.C.G.A. Section 45-11-1, they cannot be tolerated in any law enforcement agency. Second, when pressure and coercion in relation to personnel actions are used to cause tickets to be fixed, all GSP supervisory personnel as well as Board of Public Safety members who are aware of such conduct incur substantial civil liability rishs for violations of the pressured or coerced employee's rights.

Whatever administratiove actions you and the Board of Public Safety determine to be appropriate to stop the practices found to exist, at a bare minimum I recommend the following:

1. Adoption of a policy to prohibit ticket fixing with the requirement for a detailed monthly report to the board of Public Safety of all tickets voided or altered by the GSP; and

2. Adoption of a policy requiring Board approval until further notice for the initiation by the GSP of any promotions or adverse personnel actions. This is to prevent retaliation against those who have cooperated during this investigaiton.

Additionally, there is the matter of Colonel Hardison's purchase of a 1985 Ford LTD. The nub of this matter is that the purchase was for approximately $1500.00 less than it otherwise would have been because of the false report of the mileage on the automobile, 28,143 versus no more than 528. There is a strong inference that the false report was at least partially the result of Colonel Hardison's actions, but the evidence is not conclusive. I believe that it is fair to say that there exists probable cause to believe that a crime, theft by taking, occurred but that proof of such crime beyond a reasonable doubt is problematic; therefore, I do not reommend prosecution for this matter at this time.

Finally, notwithstanding the GBI's findings and this analysis, I am convinced that the overwhelming majority of GSP personnel are honest and committed to what is right. The crux of the problem at this time is a failure of leadership in the GSP. It is not for me as Attorney General to say who should lead the GSP, but I cannot fail to recommend immediate remedial action concerning how it is led. Otherwise, despite administrative measures and even legal action, the situation will not likely change. I do not recommend further investigation of the allegations of ticket fixing. In all likelihood, the GBI would simply be finding more of the same, and this would tell us no more than we already know. Most importantly, cumulative evidence concerning the practice of ticket fixing is not required to achieve the primary goal which we must now achieve, namely, to halt the paractice as soon as possible.

I am prepared at your convenience to discuss this matter in greater detail.

Sincerely yours,

/s/ Michael J. Bowers

IN THE COURT OF APPEALS OF GEORGIA

September 17, 1987

74688. GAYTON v. THE STATE. (Bi-123)

BIRDSONG, CHIEF JUDGE.

Larry Dean Gayton was convicted upon his plea of guilty of the offense of driving under the influence. With the joint consent of the prosecutor and the trial court, Gayton secured the asserted right to file an appeal based upon a claim of selective prosecution notwithstanding his plea of guilty.

Held:

Though we are of the opinion that a plea of guilty waives any asserted trial errors (TAYLOR v. STATE, 169 Ga. App. 779 (315 SE2d 288)), we will honor the promise of the right of appeal upon the issue stipulated by agents of the State. See State v. Hanson, 249 Ga. 739 (295 SE2d 297). Gayton bases his claim of illegal prosecution upon an unfair and discriminatory selectivity for prosecution for the crime of DUI. This claim arises directly out of the investigation of the conduct of the Director of the Georgia State Patrol and the members of several of that agency's district offices. The trial court admitted as evidence the investigation of the State Patrol by the GBI as well as a memorandum from the Attorney General outlining an independent investigation of the same subject. It is undisputed that an unknown number of citizens of Georgia had driving tickets, including moving traffic violations as well as DUI charges, "fixed." The evidence reflects that the investigation uncovered numerous tickets being fixed at the request of wealthy citizens, politically prominent personages, sports figures, and persons conferrring privileges or personal goods in exchange for the fixing of tickets. The practice appears to have been the result of personal favors being exercised by members of the State Patrol or at the direction of higher authority in the State Patrol. The number of such fixed tickets is apparently not discoverable inasmuch as records are not available or do not reflect the transmutations from a more serious offense to a less serious or dismissed disposition. It is clear however that within the overall number of traffic offenders, including DUI offenses, within this state, the number of tickets "fixed" is small, and, human vice being what it is, surreptitiously probably continues.

Within this context, we are required to evaluate the claim of selective prosecution. It is clear that within the contemplation of the law applicable to the theory of selective prosecution, that to succeed on a claim of selective prosecution, Gayton has the burden of showing: (1) that others similarly situated uniformly have not been prosecuted, and (2) that the allegedly discriminitory prosecution of himself was based upon an impermissibe motive. SABEL v. STATE, 250 Ga. 640, 643 (4) (300 SE2d 663). Related within this same context, we can find no indication of a vindictive prosecution for there is no evidence that the State sought to prosecute Gayton or to increase the punishment for the offense of DUI in response to his exercise of any of his constitutional rights. See UNITED STATES v. BURT, 619 F2d 831, 836 (9th Cir. 1980).

The fact that some persons are wrongly singled out for special favor does not justify a charge of discrimination or selective prosecution by those who are not.

The burden was on Gayton to prove a selective prosecution by showing (1) that others generally are not prosecuted for the same misconduct, and (2) the decision to prosecute Gayton was based upon imperimissible grounds such as race, religiion or exercise of sonstitutional rights. SABEL v. STATE, supra. While Gayton has shown that through the improper acts of a few state law enforcement officials a select few citizens have escaped the penalty of the law for DUI violations, there is a failure to establish that DUI offenders generally are not punished. Likewise, there is no evidence in this record that Gayton was treated any differently than the vast majority of other DUI offenders in this state. Certainly there is no evidence that Gayton was selected for punishment because of his race, religion, or exerise of constitutional rights.

It is clear that all prosecutions are to some degree selective. Prosecutors and law enforcement officials in the execution of their duties constantly and routinely practice some degree of selectivity in deploying their limited enforcement resources. Thus selective prosecution based upon necessity and legal actions clearly is not prohibited. UNITED STATES v. BURT, supra. Gayton has not shown successfuly that he has been singled out for prosecution for impermissible reasons by showing that a comparatively few citizens for improper reasons have not been prosecuted for the same crime. SABEL v. STATE, supra. We find no merit in this enumeration.

Judgment affirmed. Deen, P. J., and Pope, J., concur.
